MALAGASY COOKERY. Great Care Taken in Preparing the Simple Food.

Cooking being an art, every race has He a style of its own. The Malagasy, like the gentle Hindu, knows how to prepare his mess of rice, says the Lond Telegraph. It is not boiled to a mash as in England, or as our potatoes are sometimes pulped, but, covered with a proper sufficiency of water, is carefully treated until the grains are swollen fit to burst and yet remain full, intact, soft and rather mealy. The manioc root is an easier dish to prepare. It is sometimes served boiled, as yams and sweet potatoes, and again as a sort of cold porridge. Native coffee they understand how to make, and the aroma is excellent; but ten, alas! you have te look to the brewing of that from start to finish if you desire a drinkable cup. Poultry and game are eaten fresh, and the cooks have a clever and withal cleanly trick of dipping the dead aninals in boiling water, which enables them to pluck them easily and quickly. The preparation for trussing comes later. There is no lack of variety at a Malagasy table, but, all the same, you miss the wheaten flour bread, sugar and condiments when cloyed with rice, fowls, manioe and eggs. The star fuel is bunch grass, which when dried burns fiercely, and settles into a glowing ember that gives off a deal of heat. All the cooking is done on earthen hearths, and the roasting, boiling and baking in big iron pots. The grass being slightly aromatic, the odor is as agreeable as that of a hardwood fire.

Rare Bird in Louisville, Ky.

There is a negro on Center street, Louisville, who has a curiosity which exciting no little attention. The freak in question is an owl, which was captured somewhere in the Wet Woods, and is one of the rarest specimens of the tribe that has ever struck Center street. The peculiar part of this owl is that he has differently colored eyes, and when they put him upon exhibition in a dark room one of his optics shines up a most beautiful emerald, while the other is a luminous yellow. The characteristic of this bird is that he can shut his yellow eye and imagine hat it is bedtime, while, on the other hand, he can close his emerald peeper and experience a beautiful sunrise. He seems to appreciate this rure faculty which has been bestowed upon him. and exercises it freely for his own amusement. The negro who owns him has taken to charging admission to the dark room where the owl is kept, and has already accumulated a considerable sum of money out of his Wet Woods

The Bella Coola tradition is a follows: The Creator of the universe, Mes-mes-sa-la-nik, had great difficulty in the arrangement of the land and water. The earth persisted in sinking out of sight. At last he his upon a plan which worked very well. Taking a long line of twisted walrus hide, he tied it around the dry land and fastened the other end to the cor ner of the moon. Everything worked well for a long time; but at lest the spirit became very much offended at the action of mankind, and in a fit of anger one day seized his great stone knife, and with a mighty hack severed the rope of twisted skin. An old miner of Wellington, B. C., met death in a dramatic way some two weeks ago as a result of an odd, reckless practice. His long familiarity with explosives had made him careless. He always kept his keg of black powder stowed under his bed in the little cabin in which he lived and had a habit of smoking in bed until he fell asleep. This might seem criminally careless to anyone but a miner, but the possibility of disaster probably never occurred to the old man or his neighbors. But what every one else might have expected happened. One night recently a near neighbor was swakened by the crackling of flames and found the old man's cabin was ifire. Before any help could be renered the explosion came and the old niner and his cabin went up.

GLASS IMITATION OF WOOD. The Process by Which the Decept

A natent has been taken out for a singular but ingenious process for making glass veneers. The invention relates primarily to the production of ornamental glass, which may be either semi-transparent or opaque, and is made to represent highly polished wood of any description. When used for veneering, it is particularly adapted for vestibule and other doors, the exterior of the glass having the appearance of polished wood, while in the interior of he house it shows semi-transparent. The process by which the material is produced is to cloud a sheet of ground or plain glass on one side with a liquid dye of the proper color to represent any desired wood. The dye is applied by means of a sponge, which is so manipulated as to bring out the semblance the grain of the wood upon the surface of the glass. A badger brush is used to soften the shading. The glass is then covered with photographers' varnish. This leaves the grain clear and fast, without the necessity of using any gelatinous substance, which would render it liable to crack and spoil the effect. To complete the operation, the glass is slightly heated, and the various shades required for the particular wood to be imitated are caused to flow ove it by means of a syringe. The merging of the shadings into each other is pre vented by the heating of the glass. The whole is made semi-transparent by the application of another coat of photographers' varnish, which preserves and protects the dyes. The ex-terior surface then presents the ap-pearance of a finely-polished, solid wood

Gentlemen:—Replying to yours of the 1st, would say that I have used tobacco for 6 years, and of lite have consumed a 10-cent plug a day, besides smoking considerably. I commenced to use tobacco when I was only II years old, and have never been able to give up the habit until I took Narcoti-Cure, aithough I have tried other so-called remedies without effect. After using your remedy four days, all "hankering" for chewing disappeared, and in four days more smoking became unpleasant. I have no further desire for the weed, and experienced no bad effects, whatever. I am gaining in fiesh, and feel better than I have for a long time. To all who wish to be free from the tobacco habit I would say, use Narcoti-Cure, Yours truly, W. N. WAITE.

THEY LACK CONFIDENCE Lawyers Do Not Want Their Names Iden-

That it takes a smart man to draw a will is an adage the respect for which in the legal fraternity is evidenced by the fact that few lawyers want to fu nish visible evidence of their part in grawing up wills. It is perfectly easy for a man to hire a lawyer to draft his testament, of course, no matter how complicated its provisions may be. It s quite another thing, says the Chicago Tribune, to get the lawyer to witness it. He will not even allow clerks in his ffice to do so, except, perhaps, where the client is an old and regular one. He wants him to go elsewhere to get the necessary attestations. There are exceptions to this unwritten rule, it is true, but it is pretty generally observed. "Lawyers will not so admit it," said one of them, "but the true reason is they don't care to be identified with the instrument. It is about as difficult an undertaking as a lawyer can face to draw a will where the bequests are surrounded with conditions that will close up all loopholes to a contest. Most testators know how they want to dispose of their estates, but it is exceedingly hard to express their wishes in a way that will leave no doubt when subsequently disappointed heirs call it into question. The books teem with instances of the inability of smart men, some of them distinguished lawyers, to make a will that will stand under a stiff fight. Lawyers naturally don't want to be associated with a document that may be pronounced bad, and so they are unwilling to sign as witnesse or to let their employes do it. I sup pose it to some extent argues a lack of confidence in their work. Anyhow the recaution is of little use, for invariably the lawyer who drew it is disclosed in any litigation over a will."

BUSINESS ON THE SEINE.

No boats were formerly allowed to make their appearance within the boundaries of the Paris fortifications from the time when the lamns on the bridges were lighted until they were extinguished, and the regulation held good in other places. Workmen in the ports, says a Paris letter, were obliged to wear a number and were under the surveillance of the police. Boats were also compelled to unload without delay, and after sunset no labor could be undertaken. These and other rules which gave rise to frequent annoyans and grumbling have been suppressed and a code more in harmony with mod-ern requirements has been issued. Apropos of this, it is instructive to not he progress achieved by traffic on the Seine during the past fifteen years. In the old days the river burges were of 100 tons, while the number of steamers and tags, which was 200 in 1880, has risen to 500. In 1880 the total tonnage of the barges and other craft belonging to the department of the Seine w 5,009,005, but now it may be rated at 5.000,000, or double that of the port of Marseilles. Last year 48,000 bouts be here, and in the ordinance to which

The improvements effected in the river since 1860 have mainly contributed to these satisfactory results.

FORMER RARE METALS.

They Were Not Known Because The The supposed rarities of the mineral kingdom are in a great measure not seen merely because they are not sought, and those rare metals which in the days of our youth were only preserved in minute tubes as chem enricatiles are now to be found as soon as they are really wanted. Titanjum bidium lurks in considerable quantities in the potash minerals worked at Stass furth; thailium, discovered with diff culty by Mr. Crookes more than thirt; years ago by the vision of a green lin in the spectrum, can now be purchased at a few shillings an ounce; no sconer is a new element (germanium) discov ered in Saxony than it is found to have been breathing argon without knowing of its existence. Let but a demand arise, says the Lon don Saturday Review, for a rare element or mineral, such as has resulted, for example, from the introduction of an incandescent gaslight, and they are found in sufficient quantities. In this latter case an adequate supply of the rare metal zirconia was provided for a period of several years, and now, when sirconia is discarded, the far rarer quide of thorium is employed and is actually extracted in large quantities from minerals and sands in Norway North America and Brazil for illuminat

Haven't seen one since we moved in. I was commenting on this fact the other day, when an old inhabitant told me that flies will not stay at an elevation of over thirty feet above the ground. Since then I have kept watch, and have come to the conclusion that he knew what he was talking about."
